FG COMMISSIONS MAIDUGURI NATIONAL POLIO LABORATORY

As part of efforts to strengthen disease detection and response systems in the country, the Coordinating Minister of Health and Social Welfare, Professor Muhammad Ali Pate recently commissioned the National Polio surveillance laboratory, located at the University of Maiduguri Teaching Hospital in Borno State. The facility, which serves as a cornerstone for disease detection in West Africa, was heavily damaged by catastrophic flooding sometime in September 2024, bringing vital surveillance to a temporary standstill. The upgraded facility was specifically designed with enhanced infrastructure and climate resilient systems to withstand the increasing frequency of extreme weather to prevent a repeat of the 2024 shutdown. The laboratory was restored by the World Health Organization (WHO) in collaboration with the Federal Government of Nigeria, through the National Primary Health Care Development Agency (NPHCDA). The facility will help health officials to detect the presence of poliovirus faster than ever before, providing a critical early warning system for Borno State and neighboring regions. It will also provide a comprehensive view of how the virus circulates, allowing for targeted vaccination campaigns that protects millions of children across the Lake Chad Basin and the wider West African. The newly commissioned laboratory is the highest capacity facility for polio sample testing in the country, handling the largest volume of samples, particularly from across the North East, North West and North Central regions. The reopening of the facility, also stands as a testament to the country's commitment to a polio-free future and a more robust healthcare infrastructure for the West Africa region. While speaking at the ceremony, the Minister highlighted the importance of restoring the facility and its role in the final push to eradicate polio. According to him, the policy direction is to reduce reliance on foreign laboratories by expanding in-country testing capacity and investing in training and research to support national, regional and global health security. Professor Pate is optimistic that the investment will strengthen Nigeria's scientific and research capacity and position the country to monitor and respond to infectious diseases more effectively. He also added that results generated from the laboratory are consistent with those from international reference centres, underscoring the competence of Nigerian scientists. The Minister appreciated the WHO for their continued support in the fight against diseases in the country. Although Nigeria has made significant progress towards polio eradication, maintaining sensitive surveillance systems remains essential to quickly detect and respond to any emerging threats, in line with global polio surveillance standards.
